

FOR TIMES WOMEN WHO WANT TO KNOW

What Is Seen in The Shops

BY THE SHOPPER.

The millinery department of the M. Phillips store, in Eleventh street, has blossomed out in all its spring glory. Hats from all noted centers of fashion are being shown, and what is something of a novelty is the fact that some exceedingly smart and expensive English models are contained in the collection. One of these is a milian straw. In its natural color, its crown being formed of apple green taffeta silk, shaded from the darkest shade into light. A wreath of soft-toned roses encircles the crown, this simple trimming adding a chic touch to a distinctive model. A New York importation is made of straw-colored heen, the brim being draped in chintilly lace. The extreme top of the crown has a flowing black velvet bow, from which one long streamer goes under the brim, twists about a rose, and then continues down over the shoulder. The rose is in the tenderest tone of Maurice, a dainty bluish pink, in a nest of its own foliage.

Another style was developed in tan hemp, with the brim rolled up a little on the left side, and a high rounded crown. This crown was covered with coarse wicker, interspersed with soft mosses, the high effect so indispensable to hats now, being added by a bow of erge velvet which was knotted on the left side and stood straight up. This was a French model, particularly adapted to the needs of the season, as it could be worn either with a soft waist costume, or a more dressy toilet.

An odd English model, of Milan straw, faced with bright red silk, was simply trimmed with a pleated red silk ruche about the crown. The only real ornament was a bunch of shaded green apples, caught under the brim on the left side. The lines of this hat show distinction, even about the French creations that surrounded it.

One of the windows of this shop would be a revelation to the woman who is addicted to the wearing of shirt waists. Every hat in the window was of the Milan straw, which is to be the favored shirt waist hat of spring and far into the summer. All were simply, yet most effectively, trimmed, each having a small knot of brush of black and white. One in particular was a narrow-brimmed, round-crowned little shape. It had a band of white satin ribbon, piped on either side with a narrow line of black, ending in a brush of the same ribbon at the left side. Wings, and others with stick-up feathers. A white hemp hat, trimmed with natural and white lilacs, which trailed from the top of the crown downward, was decidedly summery. A little on the left side of the hat, and intermingled with the lilacs, was a knot of king's blue roses. This is a daring but artistic color combination.

The truly economical girl can have her silk waist blouse with little expenditure of change, if she will visit a department store in Market space, where they are offering many patterns of this silk, with tiny stripes of any color, for 25 cents a yard. This comes thirty-three inches wide. In yard-wide goods the price is $1.25.

In the same store there is an attractive bargain in the house furnishing department that will be of especial interest to housekeepers. Enamel pots, pans and other utensils for 25 cents are being offered. These come from a reliable manufacturer's establishment and are not to be compared with the usual offering of cheap, damaged granite-ware.

An F street leather goods store is having a mark-down sale in the department devoted to brass and fancy articles. Christmas novelties are as attractive now for eucry prizes and gifts as they were in December, and are being offered at just one-half the prices they commanded then. Little desk articles are selling as low as 25 cents each, and from this sum up to $2.50 there are many ornamental little bits that the shopper would do well to look over.

A G street department store which makes a specialty of hosiery for woman's wear, is offering a decided bargain in boat pattern silk hose for 35 cents a pair. These hose usually sell for 50 cents a pair. They have the cotton heel and toe, with a deep garter top, also of cotton, which prevents those tiresome "railroads." The hosiery of silk stockings wears.

In a department store on F street a macramé lace collar, in a rich shade of ecru is offered for $5. It is in the popular square sailor shape, and the same pattern is to be seen in pure white lace, at the same price. A hat collar with deep ruff of pleated net, edged with dainty lace, is on sale at the same counter for $1.

A florist's shop in Fourteenth street is having a special sale in spring flowers week. Jonquills, narcissus, and carnations are offered for 10 cents a dozen. They are all freshly cut, and will keep several days.

Bulldog Is Whole Fire Department in Himself

A Paris bulldog who has taken upon himself the duties of volunteer fireman is owned by J. Sparkes, the Jockey, who has now returned to Maisons-Laffitte.

Tieh, whom Sparkes purchased in England a year ago, for some unknown reason has developed an aversion to smoke, flames or any manifestation of fire. He dashes into the thick of them and extinguishes them by beating them out with his paws and biting at them with his muzzle.

He appeared in his role of canine fire fighter at Maisons-Laffitte the other day. He was set on fire and allowed to get well alight. Tieh meanwhile was held on his legs, at which he tugged desperately. Then, when the flames were at their height, he was released. Without a moment's hesitation he dashed into the thick of it and extinguished it in a few seconds, carefully biting at the smoldering scraps of charred paper until not a spark remained.

Sparkes explained that so far as he knew, Tieh had never been taught to extinguish fire. He seemed to understand it was dangerous, and therefore instinctively tried to put it out.

"I discovered his aversion to fire quite accidentally," said Mr. Sparkes. "I sometimes carelessly throwing down a match after lighting a cigarette, I noticed that Tieh always dashed for the match and put it out. I amused my friends so much that one of them tried him with a scrap of burning paper. He snatched it and blew the stronger seemed to be Tieh's determination to put it out."

FOR LITTLE FOLK JUST BEFORE BEDTIME

The Sandman's Stories

THE BROTHERS.

ONCE upon a time in a far-off country, where the people had to work very hard to get enough to eat, there lived an old man and his two sons, Simon and Nathan. Simon worked in the fields all day and helped his father all he could; in fact, he did not let his old father work at all.

But his brother Nathan was not fond of work, and he only worked when his father made him, by saying: "If you will not work you shall not eat at my table."

Nathan went into the field every day with Simon, but he only worked when he thought his father could see him, and as soon as he felt sure he was not looking Nathan would lie down under a tree and go to sleep.

Simon did not tell his father, but did all the work himself. One day while the brothers were eating their lunch an old man came along and asked for something to eat.

"Go and work for it," replied Nathan. "That is the way we get our food." But Simon gave the old man all his food and went back to his work. When the old man finished eating he went to Simon, who was plowing, and said: "You will only have to plow to the edge of the garden, but your brother shall plow the whole field."

Simon did not understand what the old man meant, but when he came to the edge of the garden he heard the old man strike something, and when he stopped to pick it up he found it was gold.

He called his father, and they found enough to put in a big basket; this Simon took to town and sold it for enough money to take care of his father and himself, and as he was a generous boy, he took care of the lazy Nathan also.

But Nathan was not satisfied and wanted gold to do as he wished with, and told Simon that as he found gold in the garden, it belonged to him as much as it did to Simon.

"You are a wicked son as well as a lazy one," said his father. "You shall not have the gold to waste in a foolish way. Go to work and earn it yourself."

Then Nathan was struck with an idea. He thought that if Simon found gold in the garden he could, so he began plowing.

He worked all day, and when night came he was tired, but no gold rewarded him. The next morning he went to the field again and began to plow up the earth, and still he did not find gold.

While he was eating his lunch he saw the old man who had asked him for food and to whom he had refused to give it. The old man did not stop this time, however, and Nathan called to him. "Come here, old man," he said, "and tell me how to find gold as my brother did."

"I am not hungry today," replied the old man, "and even if I were I should not stop to ask it from you. You lost your opportunity when I was hungry and needed help. Now you must go on plowing."

The old man went away, and Nathan thought because he had said: "You must go on plowing" that he would find gold if he plowed long enough.

So Nathan worked harder than ever, and at night he had plowed the whole field and still there was no gold.

He was so tired that he went to sleep without eating his supper, and he made up his mind he would not work any more, but help himself to the gold Simon had found. He thought he would go to the closet where the gold was kept and take it.

He hurried out of the house and down the road, but he was in such haste to get the gold that he did not see a deep ditch at one side of the road, and before he knew what had happened he found himself at the bottom of it.

His leg was broken and he could not climb out, all he could do was to call loudly for help. "What is the matter?" asked a voice, and looking up, Nathan saw again the old man. "I have broken my leg and I shall die if some one does not get me out of here."

"If you had not taken that which did not belong to you," replied the old man, "you would not be here."

"You did not let me find the gold, then?" asked Nathan. "I plowed all the field as you told me, and not a piece of gold did I find."

"You did not understand me," replied the old man. "I said you must go on plowing. I meant that you had lost your opportunity when you refused to give me food, and that now you must go on working to live, as you would never have another chance to find gold as your brother did."

The old man went away and left Nathan still calling for help, and in a short time Simon and his father, hearing his cries, found him and helped him home.

Nathan was very much ashamed when his father and Simon saw the gold in the bag, and his father said he would not have such a bad boy for a son, but Simon begged his father to forgive Nathan, and he consented if Nathan would promise to work and not be so lazy.

Nathan promised, and he went on plowing the ground, but he never found gold. He plowed the ground and raised vegetables, which he sold at the market, but he never became a rich man because he lost his opportunity when he was young by not working as his brother had done.

AMERICAN CANDIES EXPORTED TO ALL FOREIGN PORTS

London, Paris, Berlin, and South Africa Get Sweets Here.

Trunk in the office of a New York candy manufacturer, a sample trunk, evidently, belongs to a man about to start for Philadelphia or maybe Buffalo, for the concern sends men the country over from coast to coast. But if you have a curiosity really to know about it you learn that this trunk belongs to the man that covers South America and who is about to start on his regular trip, showing candy samples and seeing customers in the cities of Brazil, the Argentine, Chile and Ecuador.

Then we do export some candies? We certainly do. American candies are exported in larger or smaller quantities pretty much all over the world and our candy experts are steadily increasing. We send some to Europe, you will now find American candies on sale in London, Paris and Berlin.

Lots of American candies are sold in South Africa and they are sold in considerable quantities in India. You can buy them, for instance, in Calcutta, and they are sold in Java, Ceylon, and the Central American countries and all through the West Indies and throughout South America.

One New York candy concern has doubled its South American business within a year. Our chief competitors in this round-the-world export trade in candies are English manufacturers, but in this competition we more than hold our own.

The candies exported are principally hard candies, caramels and gum work. Those candies, made in great variety, are put up in attractive, hygienically sealed containers of tin or glass in which they are guaranteed to keep in any climate. Equal success has not thus far attended the export of chocolate, but it is now confidently believed that this problem has been solved and that chocolates also may be so made and packed in such containers as to insure their keeping and safety.—New York Sun.
